
Responsibilities and ethics

The authors who submit a project to the drafting must ensure that their proposals for seeking are unpublished, original and that we have not made use of other works of authors not involved in their proposal. All the authors always have the obligation to cite all the sources analysed and the possible collaboration with other authors.

The authors of texts and manuscripts, the result of original research, must present an accurate account of the work done, as well as an objective discussion of the result pursued. Fraudulent or intentionally inaccurate statements are unethical behaviour and are unacceptable and therefore the Direction will unquestionably reject the publication of the proposed. The proposed manuscripts must not have been published as copyrighted material in other journals or books.

Manuscripts that are being revised by the magazine should not be submitted to other journals for publication purposes. All the texts sent must respect the editorial norms of the project.

The literary authorship of the work is strictly limited to those who have made a significant contribution to the creation, design and implementation of research. All those who have made a significant contribution must be listed as co-authors. If there are other parties who have participated, they must be recognised and listed as contributors in the acknowledgements.

The author of reference must ensure that all the relevant co-authors are included in the manuscript, that they have seen and approved the final version thereof and that they agree on the presentation for publication. If an author has any significant errors or inaccuracies in the published manuscript, he has the duty to communicate it promptly to the editorial board of the magazine or to the Publisher and cooperate with them in order to retract or correct the manuscript. In this regard each author will always receive his/her contribution to be revised to which will follow the signature of the authorization form, always available on the website in the Policy page.

In the case of the use of archival documents for which authorization and payment of rights to the publication are required, such commitments will be paid exclusively by the author because the project cannot guarantee Payments for use of documentation that requires this type of procedure. Therefore all authors must guarantee total freedom from any responsibility that may fall where authorisations requiring use of money are required to publish archival documents, photographs, graphs, etc... and then royalties payments.
